EDP Authority & Limitations

What partners may do, what requires specific written approval, and what EDP status never establishes by itself.

01 / THE CENTRAL RULE

Status is not unlimited authority

An Economic Development Partner may help identify, connect, develop, and support commercial opportunities within the approved relationship. Wakaga retains control over its own approvals, projects, commitments, identity, systems, and records. An EDP must stay within the authority actually granted.

What an EDP may do within the approved role

Activity	Important boundary
Identify opportunities	Gather accurate, lawfully shareable information about credible commercial needs, suppliers, buyers, projects, or specialists.
Make introductions	Connect relevant decision-makers with permission and a clear explanation of the EDP's independent role.
Prepare information	Organize supporting documents, disclose assumptions and conflicts, and help answer review questions.
Coordinate	Arrange approved meetings and routine communications without promising a result or changing commercial terms.
Support approved work	Perform the specific tasks authorized for the project and maintain required records and reports.

If an action is outside the approved scope, stop and obtain the required authorization before proceeding. A title, badge, account, or good-standing certificate does not fill that gap.

Accurate identification matters

Describe yourself and your own organization accurately. An EDP is not automatically a Wakaga employee, officer, tribal official, general agent, spokesperson, or authorized signatory. An entity's EDP relationship does not automatically authorize every person associated with that entity.

02 / WRITTEN APPROVAL

Actions that require specific authority

Proposed action	Required approach
Communicate a firm price or offer	Use only terms specifically authorized for communication and observe their limits, conditions, and validity period.
Sign or change a contract	Confirm a specific written grant from an Authorized Wakaga Signatory. EDP status alone supplies no signing power.
Promise financing, purchasing, payment, or exclusivity	Obtain the applicable binding approval. Do not describe an opportunity under review as an approved commitment.
Expand a project role or territory	Use the required written project-change process before acting. Informal discussions do not expand scope.
Use a logo, seal, badge, or public statement	Follow current branding permissions and obtain the required approval for the specific use.
Add employees, consultants, or intermediaries	Disclose them and complete applicable approvals and personnel joinders before participation.
Share controlled information or connect a platform	Follow access and security requirements. Do not infer permission from technical ability to upload, forward, or connect.

Operational instructions and binding approval

Routine coordination and major commitments are not interchangeable. The governing agreement distinguishes types of approval. Ask the designated Wakaga contact which approval is required for the proposed action, and keep the controlling written record.

Specific authority remains limited to its stated purpose, people, project, duration, and conditions. Approval in one matter does not establish authority in another.

03 / PROHIBITED ASSUMPTIONS

What EDP status does not permit

- Claim that Wakaga has approved a project, transaction, investment, or financing when the required approval does not exist.
- Hold yourself out as the tribal government or claim governmental, tax, sovereign-immunity, certification, or procurement-preference status for your own business.
- Use the EDP agreement to conduct government-contract or government-grant activity.
- Treat a submitted lead as ownership of an industry, territory, customer, or all future business with a counterparty.
- Redirect funds, change payment instructions, or collect money on Wakaga's behalf without specific authority.
- Use unapproved personnel, hidden compensation arrangements, undisclosed conflicts, or unauthorized intermediary chains.
- Share credentials, misuse Wakaga systems, release confidential material, or use prohibited external AI processing.
- Continue presenting yourself as currently authorized after expiration or suspension, contrary to Wakaga's instructions.

Badges and certificates

Gold and Platinum are visual styles only. The separate status labels Good Standing, Expired, and Suspended indicate the public standing recorded by Wakaga. Neither a badge nor a sealed certificate establishes a different level of authority or a guarantee of performance.

No automatic financial entitlement

An introduction, meeting, preliminary work, or submitted opportunity does not automatically create compensation, reimbursement, or exclusivity. The current governing documents determine project rights and economic terms.

A partner in good standing may still lack authority for the particular action being proposed. Check both current standing and project-specific authorization.

04 / PRACTICAL EXAMPLES

Know when to pause and confirm

Example	Correct boundary
A supplier asks whether Wakaga will place an order.	Explain the review stage and refer the decision to the authorized contact. Do not promise a purchase.
A partner wants to announce a new venture.	Obtain approval of the announcement and underlying claim before publication.
A customer receives new bank details from an EDP.	Confirm the instruction independently through Wakaga's approved channel before acting.
An EDP company wants a new consultant on a project.	Disclose the person and complete required approval and joinder steps first.
A certificate is unexpired, but the directory says Suspended.	Pause reliance on the credential and request current instructions from Wakaga.

If a limit is unclear

Identify the action, current project, people involved, and relevant written authorization. Ask Wakaga for clarification before making a commitment. If an unauthorized statement has already been made, preserve the record, correct the misunderstanding, and report it promptly.
